

Name	Leody Taveras
Age	17
Team/Level	Texas Rangers/R
Position	CF/OF
Height/Weight	6'1" 170
Bats/Throws	S/R
Future Grades
Hit: 55	Relaxed in box, loads back with a lot of hip coil, great hip rotation on swing, weight moves towards front foot, plus bat speed, minimal unnecessary movement in motion and head, outstanding athleticism in swing, loose, swing is a little long and raw, approach is well ahead of his years and level, very similar swings from both sides although RH stays a little more upright, LH looks like natural side
Power: 45	Could develop average to above average raw with strength, wrists should get stronger with age, swing is tooled for line drives but he barrels ball well, 13-16 home run power with gap oppo power seems likely but has a projectable body so that number could go up
Run: 55	Long legs and is probably an above average runner right now, average acceleration, smaller build on a projectable frame, with his build he could put on muscle without slowing down much, could be able to steal 20-25, should be rangy enough to stick in CF at least through his mid 20's
Glove: 55	Range should stay as above average as a center-fielder, advanced baseball skills for age and repetition bode well for learning optimal routes and getting good reads
Arm: 55	Above average arm strength and a loose projectable arm, raw
Summary	Leody is an exciting young player in the AZL with 5 tool potential. At 17 he is one of the youngest guys there and probably has one of the most advanced approaches as well. Taveras should stick in CF even with added weight and age. As long as his pitch recognition and fielding keep up with the swing and approach Leody should be a fast riser through the system as well. As with any young player there is a lot of risk, but the upside is there along with the already solid baseball skills.
Overall	55
Date	28-Jul-16
Report By	Kevin Carter