

Name	Ryan Cordell
Age	24
Team/Level	Texas Rangers/AA
Position	OF
Height/Weight	6'4" 200
Bats/Throws	R/R
Future Grades
Hit:40	Stance and swing are very loose and athletic, loads hands back with minimal hip coil, above average bat speed, good weight transfer, swing is longer than optimal, decent approach but struggles with good off-speed
Power: 50	Plus raw, gets good separation with swing, creates good loft when he barrels ball, occasionally goes to opposite field and does have the strength to hit it out, limited by how often hard contact will be made, 14-17 home runs in full season
Run: 60	Top of the line athlete with better than plus top speed but average acceleration, good instincts on base paths, reads pitchers well and gets good jumps, should be able to steal 14-18 bases, good enough range for CF right now but long term probably limited to corner outfield positions, should have well above average range for LF and RF
Glove: 55	Can play all 3 outfield positions currently, jumps are mediocre and need work, routes are usually efficient although he's not immune to a bad one from time to time, speed will play anywhere in OF, makes all of the routine plays
Arm: 55	Above average arm with a quick release, arm can get a little wild on quick plays occasionally, hits cutoffs consistently, can let loose and throw from medium outfield to home plate when needed
Summary	Ryan Cordell is an athlete and plays like one. He should run, field, and hit for power and there's a chance he improves the approach and eye enough to be an average hitter in the MLB. Makeup is top flight; Cordell is a hard worker and according to coaches and teammates a genuinely good person. Cordell should be a quality 4th outfielder on a successful team for years to come.
Overall	45
Date	29-Jul-16
Report By	Kevin Carter